He earned a doctorate of osteopathic medicine at the Kansas City University of Medicine and Biosciences and holds a master's degree in health-care leadership from Rockhurst University, Kansas City.

"As a medical student, I had an opportunity to work in some rural communities. I instantly fell in love with small town medicine," Miley said. "I really enjoy the people and the challenges that rural medicine present. Most importantly, the relationships that I have built with my rural patients have been priceless."
